SEGUN OGUNDELE

Segun Ogundele is a PhD candidate in Health Economics within the Department of Health Services Research at Maastricht University. He has Masters in Global Health from Maastricht University, Netherlands and in Demography from the University of Southampton, in the United Kingdom. His research interests are largely in the topics of equity and inequalities, comparative health policy, maternal and child health, and primary health care. His thesis, using quantitative measures, explores the significance of socioeconomic status in creating inequalities in the utilization of reproductive health care service among women in Sub-Saharan African countries.
