COMICS FOR SCIENCE TRANSLATION: POLICY, RESEARCH, STORY

JANE ZHAO

Jane Zhao is a lover of comics because when they have no brain or patience for words, they escape into image. They are a PhD student studying Health Services Research at the University of Toronto and graduate of the Masters in Narrative Medicine at Columbia University. They co-facilitate the Interprofessional Health Arts & Humanities Certificate program at the University of Toronto. Talk to them about Asterios Polyp, primary care policy, and muscle pain.

SHELLEY WALL

Shelley Wall is an Associate Professor in the Biomedical Communications graduate program at the University of Toronto. As an educator and certified medical illustrator, she believes in visual art as a powerful means of reflection and communication in healthcare. Her primary area of research and creation is Graphic Medicine—that is, comics as a medium for narratives of health and illness.
